Micro-breweries

In the United States there is only little choice in for beer drinkers. Therefore, the first pioneers have begun to brew themselves.

1970s

Global revolution

The trend to brew beer by oneself, keeps spilling over from the United States to the world and has long since reached Germany.

Craft Beer Workshop
The Carl-Schurz-Haus / German-American Institute (DAI) Freiburg e.V. shares a post of the DAI Freiburg, which in turn published an event announcement for a workshop. The article links, inter alia, to Budweiser, which resulted in a particularly high reach in March.

Craft Beer at LIDL
Craft beer now even reaches the German supermarkets – or rather it fails to. In this case a customer is angry that his local market unfortunately had no craft beer on offer. LIDL addresses this problem and posts a response. The interaction leads to a particularly high reach in November.

Felix vom Endt lives in Berlin and holds a Master's degree in Economic Social Work from the Coburg University of Applied Sciences. He has gained experience at the Beer Academy Berlin and has worked ever since at the brewery Heidenpeters. His international experience in Vancouver, Canada at a brewery inspired him in 2007 to start his own blog about the beer scene.

"The term 'good beer' to me means particularly life, passion, transparency and love. The beer comes first place rather than marketing, business-friendliness and sales!"
"In addition, of course, there is our beer test [...]. We simply want to inform [consumers] that there are many great small breweries with wonderful beer".

Felix vom Endt explores the beer scene not only privately, but also at the professional level. He describes himself as a lover and supporter of good beer and uses his blog to spread information, trends and beer recommendations for the national and international beer scene. Since 2010 craft beer plays a more prominent role in his posts.
